Chaos in Real Data studies the range of data analytic techniques available to study nonlinear population dynamics for ecological time series. Several case studies are studied using typically short and noisy population data from field and laboratory.

Chaos in Real Data - The Analysis of Non-Linear Dynamics

The optimistic hypothesis that all of this could be deterministic chaos has gradually evolved into the less convenient recognition that various forms of unpredictable "noise" (climate, external disturbance, habitat modification by other species, etc.) coexist with the nonlinearities produced by competition, predation, parasites, pathogens and their potentially complex interactions.

Defining Chaos for Real, Noisy Data: Local Lyapunov

chaos and probability. Two key points in this discussion are: (i) the role of ergodic theory and (ii) the suggestion of uncertainty modeling and analysis by probabilistic methods. Statistical analyses related to chaos are discussed in Sections 3 and 4. In Section 3, the emphasis is on some "data analytic" methods for analyzing chaotic data.

Order from chaos 3. Disruptive consumer technology. New smart watch devices constantly and seamlessly stream in real time users' blood pressure, pulse rates and glucose levels. Right now in Europe, the first ear-clip-linked device monitors glucose levels. Another technology company is believed to have similar plans for a contact lens.

deterministic chaos is characterized by sensitive dependence on initial conditions as indicated by a positive Lyapunov exponent. However, ambiguity arises when applying this criterion to real-world data that are corrupted by measurement noise or perturbed nonautonomously by exogenous deterministic or stochastic inputs.
