Soul Surfer. The entire section of the story from the First Plot Point to the Midpoint is pretty "pinchy" everything from the reporters waiting outside Bethany's house when she returns to the hospital to her inability to do common chores. But the bandage coming off is the clear turning point that drives all of this home.

Surfers judge the quality of a wave by its shape; the more the top or crest throws out to the bottom of the wave, the better. This makes the wave form a little hole that a surfer can pull into, called the tube. The quality is also judged by the length of the wave; a wave that breaks in a line is much better than a wave that breaks all at once,...
